The Andaman Cellular Jail, often called the "Kala Pani" or "Black Water," stands as a poignant symbol of India's struggle for independence. On December 30, 1943, a historic event unfolded when Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose hoisted the Indian flag at the South Point of Port Blair. This marked the first time the Indian tricolor was unfurled on Indian soil during the freedom struggle.

Today, visitors can experience a powerful reminder of this era through the evocative Sound and Light Show at Cellular Jail. This captivating presentation vividly recounts the heroism and sacrifices of India's freedom fighters, immersing audiences in the dramatic history of the struggle for independence.
